

carhiremarket.com warns about high prices over the Whitsun weekend

The Whitsun weekend is a perfect occasion to go on a short holiday trip by hired car. But anyone who plans such a trip must keep in mind to make the reservation for the rental car as soon as possible! Since nobody wants to pay peak prices, read the advice carhiremarket.com is giving.

Reasons for the big price increase can be found very easily. Because the Whitsun weekend is such a popular time, rental cars will run short very soon. Therefore, an early booking is the only way to avoid those peak prices that are evolving from the huge demand, but relatively small offer for hired cars over the Whitsun holidays. Popular destinations like the Balearic Islands do already suffer from car hire shortage. Particularly the small rental car categories are only available for a very high price over the Whitsun weekend.

“On the island of Majorca, small cars belonging to the Mini-Category are almost booked out. And if such a car is still available, you might even pay more for it than for a hired car in the Economy class, which belongs to a higher category.”, Anna-Kristina Stein, product manager of carhiremarket.com, states.

Just to give an impression: If you want to rent a car over the whole Whitsun week in e.g. Majorca, you pay at the moment about £ 120 for a hired car in the Economy class and even £ 136 for a rental car in the Mini-Category. Yet, more price increase can be expected the closer the Whitsun weekend actually gets. Another reason for the high prices is the fact that many car hire companies have reduced their fleets due to the financial crisis and are still not back to their “normal size”.

Therefore, carhiremarket.com highly recommends its customers to book a hired car for the Whitsun holidays as soon as possible. Only by doing so, a reasonably priced rental car is available in the exact category one prefers. Since time is running out, one should book now and start to look forward to the Whitsun holidays 2010.
